That's our take on the new gameplay details. But, before we dive into the details, how are we going to feel when our FIFA Team is facing off against Lionel Messi in Hyper Motion? We had a chance to experience this technology first-hand and make some predictions about how players will react to this new animation style. We just finished up our first FIFA 22 practice matches at EA Sports' studios in Orlando Florida. If you're interested in what it was like to be in on our first run-through of Hyper Motion, check out our gameplay video. Check out a few highlights from our first-hand video experience: Rostov-Sevastopol's 'Boomer' Adel Suleiman is our top player in FIFA 22 using our first run of the game. Adel started the game and was immediately noticed by us as we played with our C.M.P. Gold team. His ability to dominate the ball, combined with his impressive acceleration and speed lends his presence as one of the standout players in the game. Our second top player is likely to be Dani Bautista of Club Brugge in Belgium. He was running around with his CMF Fire Team at the top level in our video, and his ability to drive the ball at top speeds was impressive. We'll be doing a full write-up on Club Brugge soon. We also had access to a few other FC Barcelona players throughout the week at the studio and it was apparent immediately that they're all very comfortable with this new animation approach. Some of our practice matches also featured other EA SPORTS FIFA 22 branded teams and players, such as Morata on the “Furious Motion” team, Alexander Gutierrez on the “Fiesta Motion” team, Kylian Mbappe on the “Fiesta Motion” team, and Paul Pogba on our C.M.P. Gold match up. We also had the opportunity to play a handful of session matches against other teams from the EA SPORTS FIFA Ultimate Team, where we had the chance to test the new player animations and movements. These matches were also streamed live, so you can watch footage of these matches on our Facebook page. Here’s what you can expect in FIFA 22 based on our gameplay experience: The Impact of
