In motion capture, data is recorded as each part of the body - from head and arms to legs and feet - moves. The movements can then be slowed down and then remapped on a camera-like screen to create animations of the player that match their movements exactly. And while these animations look really slick, there's one huge problem: the player doesn't actually move like this. For a second, I wondered why it had only just dawned on me that videogame players aren't really humans and that their movements aren't recorded. I don't know about you, but whenever I watch a match on TV, I can see the players doing all sorts of weird, unbelievable things. The players' movements look so realistic that it seems almost impossible that they were animated in a motion capture studio like the one in the video below. Look closely - when Neymar runs into the space, his right foot comes down off the ball first, followed by his knee. He then quickly kicks the ball, which lifts his right foot and toe off the ground. And when he catches it, his left foot stays on the ground. If you look really carefully, you can see his feet moving slowly side to side in the direction of his run, just like they would when playing a game. FIFA is the world's biggest football game, with almost a billion copies sold. At the same time, the comparisons between real life and videogames don't stop there. For one thing, video games are infinitely more popular than real-life football. Global football spending alone will come to $36.2 billion this year, and if you take into account the billions more spent on video games, the figure is easily higher. Now, imagine if you could make all the game content, animations and other game modes that people spend all that money on to look exactly like they do in real life.

Imagine all the cutting-edge technology combined with all the millions of hours of game footage that would mean that every football action could be reproduced as clearly as it appears in the real thing. If only we could really do that, I wonder how many would be willing to say that football had actually gone too far. Not long ago, a few vloggers tried to prove that football was just as much of a sport as hockey. And not long before that, a guy who was quite famous for his claims that video games were so good that

What's new:

- EA has implemented a brand new handling model for the first touch system. Now a player will have slight adjustments at the tackle of an opponent, another impact with the ball during a counter-attack or a dribble attack, and a last impact with his/her foot on a through ball. The perception of the player's last touch now make him dribble toward his opponent and it will now actually lead him correctly. More control of the dribbling player is also included, making a small impact on the surrounding players during a dribble run.
- FIFA has changed its web accessibility guidelines and the implementation. As a result, the game can now be played on any web browser that supports CSS3, but also any Windows or Mac operating system that runs Internet Explorer 9 or newer (tested with IE 11 and 12)
- Engine performance improvements for Specific hardware configurations. Additional generalisation improvements for gamepad compatibility.
- A set of improvements has been made to the interaction between the players and the ball. Players are now better at dribbling in tight spaces and around other players, and the behavior of players when they take control of the ball has been improved.
- Goalkeepers new body awareness when about to throw or when quickly picking up the ball. When you take a shot, goalkeepers now react better to different events and actions.
- Loft passes and balance improvements on complex patterns. Batting improvements on fast balls towards the keeper.
- Lasers. A new infrastructure for high-speed players traveling.

- A new vibrant Club atmosphere. New dreams for young footballers and fans to inspire them to find their own path in the game.
- New dynamic animations for defenders catching the ball and interceptions. A new defense ready for headers and short balls. New challenges against physical players.
- Referees are included for more intelligence and control.
- Nine Country Kits updated.

In 1967, Canadian Alexei Leonov became the first human to travel into space and became a hero. The only astronaut to visit three planets, he is celebrated today as an enigma of the space age and the first ever person in space. It's 1967. In Canada, a new player, Alexei Leonov, emerges as the most exciting talent, thanks to his control and skill on the ball. He's the best goalkeeper in the national team, but his team, Canada Soccer, loses to England in the World Cup final. The Canadian team comes next in the next World Cup, only to lose again in the final to Italy. Alexei is a world-class athlete, but a soccer player who can't play FIFA? "The Dream" (A Human in Space) made Alexei a legend and is an iconic piece of Canadian music. It's also a mission statement for EA Canada. Our goal for the creation of every game is to create moments that are as emotionally authentic as they are technically authentic. By putting you in the shoes of Alexei, we hope to create moments that feel real and also give you the experience you expect from FIFA.
