Microsoft Lifecam vx 800: The next version of this webcam is called LifeCam VX-600, VX-800, VX-1000, VX-1000i or VX-6000. The new models actually support other driver than VX-800 but they were never released.. I have a big Dell laptop running windows, and I've been looking for drivers for it, and the computer has a web cam. The LifeCam VX-800, VX-1000, VX-6000 and VX-8000 cameras all use a similar camera driver to allow for

Q: Binding two json webservices in MVC2 I'm attempting to take the json output from two different webservices and display it in a single view. The two webservices are returning a list of records, so I need to somehow merge the two records and present one single record. I'm attempting to use jquery to merge the records for testing purposes, but I'm not sure exactly how I would proceed. How would I go about doing this? A: With what you have said so far, I assume that those two json services are return different fields of a single object. One service returns a list of objects, which are the list of records, and the other service returns a single record. So, you need to wrap the two different json services in a function.

This function should have a return type string, so that you can use it as the model for display of a view. The function:

function
getData(){ var a = //Load a json service var b = //Load a json service var list = a.GetList(params); var record = b.GetOne(params); //Create the single object return { 'List':list, 'Record':record }; } The view(which is bound to the model returned by the function): $('#listofRecords').append( $('#').appendTo('body')); Since I haven't tested this, I cannot say if it is a correct
