Moirs is the story of a girl named Moir; she was born with a rare heart defect that her doctors claim makes her a miracle. She's been carefully kept under observation in a self-contained world with only a few other people. Although the rules of her existence are supposed to be normal, her waking experience is one of anxiety and humiliation. One day, her doctors disappear for 8 months and return with a new, old woman. She claims to be Moir's mother, and introduces her family members who at first, don't know her identity or who she is. Each day, she writes one letter, trying to write down all her memories. But on her thirteenth birthday, her writing is suddenly interrupted by a new hand. At first, the hand is clumsy, but gradually she grows to like it. From that day on, Moir is never the same again. And even if she is, she doesn't remember anything from her past or the other Moirs or her real mother.
