Certain embodiments of this disclosure relate to polyaxial screw and/or a semi-constrained rotor plate for a pedicle screw. A pedicle screw is a screwed fixation device used in spinal fusion procedures to provide three-column stability of spine. The screw is inserted into the pedicle portion of a vertebra through the posterior lateral incision (PLI) and threaded into the vertebral body through the pedicle. The screw includes a head and a shank that is inserted into the vertebral body. The head may include a pedicle screw portion and a polyaxial screw portion. The polyaxial screw portion has a polyaxial head so that the head can be located at the posterior side of the vertebra in the context of a spinal fusion procedure. The polyaxial screw head provides for articulation as the screw is inserted into the vertebra.

Presence of a pea-like mutant in pea (Pisum sativum L.). Pigeon pea (Pisum sativum L.) is a suitable material for studying cell proliferation, the influence of stress and senescence-associated genes as well as the plants' interactions with soil microorganisms. The abundance of another variety of pea, 'R'-pea (Pisum sativum cv. 'Rösa', Pisum sativum L., cultivar), has declined dramatically over the years in the Czech and Slovak Republics. On the basis of cytological examination, studies on resistance to biotic and abiotic stress, and preliminary molecular data, we assume that the 'R'-pea variety is a new mutant variety of pea. This suggestion is supported by the presence of a single cytoplasmic male-sterile mutant of 'R'-pea in the Czech Republic. The yield of this mutant is 50-60% compared with nonmutated pea cv. 'Rösa' under controlled conditions. This variety may contribute to the preservation of the wild pea genetic pool.

Unsigned Manchester United reserve striker Dominic Calvert-Lewin says he wants to win the club's Young Player of the Year award and needs good results in the Premier League and Champions League to do so. Calvert-Lewin is currently in his second spell at United following his three-year spell at Everton. His United return was made permanent this summer after he impressed on loan from Premier League side Burnley. "I think it's a great award, it would be a big honour to win it," Calvert-Lewin told BBC Sport. "I need a good run of games. I need to be playing well - and we have a run of games now, a run of games coming up at the end of the season. "It's tough to say which games but I need to start games, then I'll have a good run. I need to do that for my own chance because I think now I can force my way in. "Over the last few years, I've been near the top of the team. I'll continue to push for my spot as well and fight for that. I want to impress." United boss Jose Mourinho told his club's official website that Calvert-Lewin is "strong, tough and very good with the ball" and "not in hurry to come off the bench" and that he has "potential". "He has everything to progress. I feel he has everything to be a top top player in the future," Mourinho said. "He has done everything for us. He will leave with some top, very good history." Calvert-Lewin, who began his career at Tottenham Hotspur, was asked by BBC Sport if he felt he had improved since his loan spell at Burnley last season. The 18-year-old said: "I think it's fair to say I've progressed. You can see that at Everton now. To get playing time in the league is obviously really good for my confidence, and to play in a Champions
