Autodesk AutoCAD 2009 Portable. is the representation of a procoliferative role for TGF*β*, but this is unclear ([@B58]-[@B60]). We have shown that LPS, a proinflammatory stimulus also used by *L. infantum* to replicate in macrophages, promotes TGF*β*1 mRNA levels in J774 cells and enhances IL-10 secretion ([@B61]). This indicates that in cell type-specific ways, LPS and *L. infantum* share similar mechanisms of induction of TGF*β*. In any case, these effects are not dependent on TLR4, since LPS signaling involves both TLR2 and TLR4 ([@B62]). After infection, and in agreement with a previous report ([@B61]), LPS induced the production of several anti-inflammatory cytokines and factors. Although the mechanism of action for these factors in parasite infection is less clear, one can speculate that these factors participate in the curtailing of TGF*β* activity in infected macrophages. The myxoma virus and its gene product, M-T1R, a protein that blocks TGF*β*1 activity during infection of cardiomyocytes and one of the few parasite-derived molecules shown to have this activity, might contribute to this action ([@B63]). Not only did the reduction in the release of the inflammatory cytokines IL-6 and TNF after the incubation of macrophages with *L. infantum* or with LPS, but, in addition, there was also an increased release of TGF*β*1, IL-10, and IL-1ra in these cells. We cannot explain the reason for the increase in IL-1ra and TGF*β*1 but the increased release of IL-10 is not surprising considering that the cytokine is a critical controller of immune responses to *L. infantum* ([@B60], [@B64], [@B65]). In contrast to TNF and IL-6, the level of IL-1ra has been shown to be increased in the sera of CL patients ([@B66], [@B67]). Moreover, IL-1ra can be expressed in macrophages and other cells, with an anti-inflammatory function, at
