In what has become an annual ritual, the City Council on Tuesday approved a measure that will require people living in public housing to pay higher rents as insurance against unexpected vacancies or repairs. The $150 million plan now goes before Mayor Mike Bloomberg's administration for approval. "This was a difficult decision," said Jonathan Green, the president of the Federation of Protestant Welfare Agencies, which supports the measure. "Poverty and homelessness are a serious problem in this city. But that does not give housing agencies the right to take the rent and security deposits out of people's pockets." City advocates said the program — under which the city-wide average vacancy rate is said to be between 5.5 and 7.5 percent, or about 20,000 units — should be filled within two to five years. PROJECT SUMMARY. Hematopoietic stem cells (HSCs) are responsible for generating all blood cell lineages throughout an organism's life. As a result, perturbations in HSC homeostasis and hematopoiesis can lead to a wide variety of blood diseases including myeloid
