Every human being, regardless of age, has rights, including the right to life, to work, to participate in the cultural and political life of the society, and to exercise his/her own freedom, which are fundamental to human dignity. The Convention on the Rights of the Child is the international legal instrument which was adopted on July 30, 1989 by the General Assembly of the United Nations. According to the Convention, every child has the right to have his or her life, physical and mental health, and well-being respected, and has the right to protection from torture and other cruel, inhuman or degrading treatment or punishment. The rights of children All children (even babies and infants) have certain rights guaranteed by both the Convention on the Rights of the Child and the Constitution of the State. There is no violation or denial of their rights when the State prosecutes them. It is appropriate to protect children's rights by understanding their culture, social and economic background, or the prevailing situation in the society they live in. In assessing the rights of children, government and society should take into account the potential negative consequences of their decisions on children. Economic rights Children have the right to the highest standard of living available in the country. They should have equal access to food, housing, health and education, especially the least fortunate children. Children have the right to be provided with food, water and basic necessities of life. The governments are responsible for guaranteeing that the basic necessities for children are met. According to Article 10, every child has the right to maintain and enjoy close and continuing relationships with his/her parents, siblings and other relatives, and there is no discrimination against parents who have given birth to children. Children have the right to protection, respect and enjoyment of the highest attainable standard of physical and mental health, to play and leisure activities and to an adequate standard of health, which includes the right to social security. Children have the right to be protected from exploitation and abuses. They have the right to be safe from harm and not to suffer any discrimination on the basis of sex, race, color, language, religion or other circumstance. Children have the right to be protected from sexual exploitation and
